

I'm not robot

Continue

Nursery rhymes games free

Preparing for the arrival of your baby can be a magical time. Designing a theme, choosing colors and selecting all furniture and accessories to make the nursery the perfect environment for your child can be completely engaging and lots of fun. It will take your mind off your aching back and shift your focus to the happy future rather than to your swollen feet - when you see your feet, that is. Because it's such a great time, and parents of course want their babies to have everything it takes to get a good start in life, there are lots of products out there touted as must-haves for a well-equipped, attractive nursery. If you're on a budget, hate waste or just disapprove of buying items that have limited functionality, our list of 10 things your new nursery doesn't need will help separate the hype from the real deal when it comes to creating a practical and efficient room for your baby. Content Decorative wallpaper designed with baby in mind will make your friends sigh and give you a warm feeling -- until you try to remove it in a few years. Save yourself the aggravation by sticking with stencils, vinyl stickers or decorative framed prints for the walls. If you must, go with a ceiling or chair rail wallpaper edge and leave it at that. Ad Those Signature Pink and Blue Pastels That New Baby! will be tempting for about 15 minutes. Paint your nursery a color that can grow as your child grows. The room may still be pink or blue - whether green or yellow - but select vibrant shades. Choose a shade that won't cringe at the thought of inviting friends into his baby room in a few years. That way you will be able to avoid repainting during the crèche-to-kid's room transition. Ad There is a natural tendency for new parents to want to buy the best baby furniture they can afford, and a lot of that money and attention is spent choosing a crib. You plan to have a large family or have a dream of passing on a beautifully crafted crib to your child as she grows up. In the meantime, you need to maintain and store that crib, though -- possibly by multiple moves. You also feel compelled to lend it to a sibling or two who are not as careful with it as you would like. Is a crib really worth the extra cost, stress and hassle? One exception may be a convertible crib that can grow with your baby. Convertible cribs can cost as much as a crib and toddler bed bought separately, so do some cost analysis before you decide that this option is for you. Ad Shiny new baby stuff is so much fun. It smells new, feels new -- and costs a lot more than used baby stuff. Baby items usually support very little wear and tear and can look good and functionally through multiple owners. If you buy used items, accept hand-me-downs from family members, or borrow items from friends, they will be just as useful as expensive new baby stuff. Even if you have an unlimited budget, think of all those who Strollers, rockers, dressing tables and high chairs cluttering from landfills around the country and start building a more eco-friendly future for your child by saving your nursery with some softly used items Ad if you ask a grandmother about specialized baby items like wipe warmers, you're likely to get a head shake and maybe even a mocking sniff. Babies don't really need much, so a lot of the baby stuff you come across is a want-to-have and not a need-to-have. In the case of sweeping warmers, if you live in a temperate climate or keep your home warm in winter, they are superfluous. If you live where it gets cold and you keep your home cool, you can get warm wipes with the heat of your hands or put them in the microwave for a few seconds. At best, baby wipes warmers are novelty items that you probably don't use much or not at all. Ad Generations of moms and dads did it with using the sink or the bath to bathe baby. Baby bathtubs sound cool in theory, but they're not really needed. In fact, they are one more thing to store, clean, disinfect and dispose of later. After your baby starts growing, you will look back on all the baby paraphernalia you have collected and regret buying most. Chances are the baby bath will be somewhere toward the top of the list. Ad Spending prime time with baby rocking back and forth may prove to be one of your best memories. Baby won't remember, but you will. Although we recommend you invest in a comfortable seat, splurging on an expensive glider upholstered to suit the nursery is probably a mistake. We love the idea of an all-wood rocker like the one your grandmother used to have in the den. It takes up less space than a fancy upholstered glider seat, and tidying up is a breeze. Ad Decor items for nurseries can get extravagant in the extreme, and hand-painted murals are just one example. From custom paint jobs to stained glass fixtures with baby themes, keeping the glitter under control in the nursery can be difficult, especially when your imagination and hormones are in overdrive. If you want a reality check before you buy something you don't need, take a look at a few experienced moms who are equipping daycare centers for the second or third time. They know the value of keeping things simple and efficient. Ad If you're a new parent, diapers will be a big part of family life for the foreseeable future. There are a number of ways to handle diaper duty, but investing in a disposable diaper treatment system like the Diaper Genie can be a little overdone, especially if you have qualms about contributing more than necessary to the local landfill. It takes about 500 years for a disposable diaper to be biodegradable in landfill, and the average baby goes through 5,000 to 9,000 diapers. When you have the extra layers of plastic contributed by diaper bundling systems, you are not doing your big, big, great-grandchildren (there are quite a few more greats greats Favors. Good daily maintenance and a garbage can with lid and foot lever work great - and also cost a lot less. Ad This is controversial because it can be a useful tool if you have the space and budget for it. But the fact is that you can change a baby everywhere, and the top of a regular low chest of drawers will work just fine. Yes, changing tables are just the right height, but we don't like furniture that can't multitask unless they're essential, like a crib, or have a very long life span, like a chair. If you have money to burn, go for it, but chances are you think it was a stupid extra for too long. The only exception is a dressing table and dresser combo where the table can be removed, allowing the dresser to function as a handy piece of nursery furniture. Are you looking for how to involve your children in room decorating? Read our guide on How to engage your kids in room decorating now! Sources Daniel. Susan and Debbie Overstreet. Your baby's nursery? What you need. Mullin's Nursery. 2005. (1/12/11). . Greenversations - The future: energy-producing diapers. 11/19/09. (1/12/11). Leslie. First home. Nantucket Press. 1998.Momaroo. Operation Nursery in progress. 10/24/08. (1/12/11). Suzanne, Emma Sarran and Joanna Smith. 25+ Nursery Design Ideas. Undated. (1/11/11). Tsh. The Things You Don't Need (But They Say You Do) For a New Baby. Simple mother. 2/19/10. (1/12/11). t-need-but-they-say-you-do-for-a-new-baby/Rude, Roo. Children's rooms on a weekend. Betterway Books. 2002Town and Country Pediatrics. Baby care. Undated. (1/12/11). A.M., Shoreview, Minn. Animals are particularly favorite images for addicted carpets. Adding human figures, especially children, increased the value. Your Carpet shows the 1830 nursery rhyme Mary Had a Little Lamb, which was written by Sarah Josepha Buell Hale. This addicted carpet probably dates back to the 1940s, based on the colors used, and possibly made of a pattern. Previous carpets often don't tell such charming stories as this one, especially in these kinds of graphic details. p>Valued at: $650 *The estimates provided are provisionally only and subject to change based on first-hand inspection and further investigation. Rating prices refer to the fair market value of an item, or what one would expect to pay for an item of similar age, size, color and condition at auction. This created and maintained by a third party and imported to this page to help users provide their email addresses. You may find more information about this and similar content on piano.io piano.io piano.io